Feb. 20, 2009	EDITORIAL: PCC leads the way against tobacco on campus The Oregonian The Oregonian editorial board http://www.oregonlive.com/opinion/index.ssf/2009/02/pcc_leads_the_way_against_toba.html With any luck, the governing board of Oregon's largest educational institution started a statewide trend Thursday when it moved forward toward a ban on the use of tobacco products on campus. . . . All the more reason for a statewide campus ban. Legislators, are you listening? If not, they should listen to nursing student Rebecca Geary, who attends Mt. Hood Community College and wishes it would follow PCC's lead.

	"I have seldom walked through the parking lots, or from one class to the next," she says, "without having to walk through at least one cloud of smoke." Geary, a mother, grandmother and cancer survivor, is right. Her concern for her health should trump her fellow students' compulsion to light up on campus

Feb. 3, 2009	Colleges restricting smoking in tobacco-rich N.C. http://hamptonroads.com/2009/02/colleges-restricting-smoking-tobaccorich-nc More than two dozen colleges and universities in North Carolina have banned or severely restricted tobacco use on campus. Smoking bans have been slow to come in North Carolina, which has a rich history in growing tobacco. The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill last year ordered smokers to stay 100 feet away from campus buildings.
Feb. 3, 2009	Colleges expand anti-smoking rules Advocates see a 'tipping point' in campaign; some smokers feel ostracized Raleigh (NC) News & Observer Anne Blythe - Staff Writer http://www.newsobserver.com/news/higher_education/story/1391566.html In a state that once touted the golden leaf's economic benefits as greater than its health risks, UNC-CH is one of 26 college and community college campuses to adopt policies either banning or severely limiting tobacco use. The haze around the flagpole -- one of the few places outside the 100-foot smoke-free perimeter around all campus buildings -- is a sign of the progress that tobacco-free advocates are making. . . . But even those abiding by the rules say the movement to go smoke-free has been slow to catch fire in this state. No citations were issued at UNC-Chapel Hill during the first year of the smoking ban, although complaints about rule-breakers prompted 13 written warnings by UNC-CH police. The Orange County district attorney is not thrilled that those complaints might one day end up in local courtrooms. . . . Other colleges are putting in new restrictions. Peace College in Raleigh went smoke-free at the start of the year. Wake Tech bans smoking, as does Louisburg College in Franklin County, according to the state Health and Wellness Trust Fund.

"You feel like a leper anyway. It's really very demeaning." Storch was among a handful of professors at the 14 universities who testified about the smoking ban during a hearing on an unfair-labor-practice complaint filed by the State System of Higher Education's faculty union. A ruling is not expected before February. The 5,900-member Association of Pennsylvania State College and University Faculties wants the ban rescinded. The policy was imposed with virtually no warning, and the union argues that any changes should have been negotiated.

The business caters to the entertainment and social needs of young adults in need of a space to unwind, hang out and listen to music in an off-campus location. Though adults of all ages enjoy Spiritual Haze, college-aged individuals comprise the better part of patrons. Spiritual Haze aims to create a comfortable yet stimulating environment for all customers in a consistent, stress free, and social atmosphere. Here guests can relax, socialize, and enjoy smoking 'shisha', or flavored tobacco. Whole tobacco leaves soaked in molasses and honey are flavored with various fruit and spices, creating a smooth taste and gentle smoke that is filtered through water, juice or milk. Hookahs, shisha, and coals are available for retail sale through the Spiritual Haze store.

I try to eat well and exercise, and I'm not a cigarette smoker. But throughout college and until recently, I would enjoy getting together with friends and splitting an apple- or mint-flavored hookah on the weekends. . . . However, smoking anything has health consequences. Hookahs are not safer than cigarettes. . . . d-hand smoke from cigarettes. Many reputable institutions have done studies on the health effects of hookah smoke. Their findings are alarming: * The American Academy of Periodontology states that water pipe smokers are five times more likely than nonsmokers to show signs of gum disease. * A 2005 World Health Organization study advisory states that a typical one-hour session of hookah smoking exposes the user to 100 to 200 times the volume of smoke inhaled from a single cigarette. . . .

Anis Ben Harzallah goes before the City Council tonight, requesting a change of heart on allowing customers to takes pulls on water pipes at HB Tobacco, 53 E. Broadway Road.

	The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. It's been two months since the council voted unanimously against allowing Harzallah to modify the business' use permit, which currently allows the sale of tobacco - but not the smoking of tobacco. He had admitted allowing smoking there after opening in early 2007. According to a legal document filed with the city by Harzallah's attorneys, patrons should be allowed to smoke hookah because the city had never before distinguished between tobacco retailers and lounges like HB Tobacco.

	REBECCA TODD - The Press http://www.stuff.co.nz/stuff/4704015a7694.html Canterbury University's no-smoking policy will discourage students from studying on campus, the student president says. Acting Vice-Chancellor Professor Ian Town said the university was set to become smoke-free by January 1 next year, but there was still some debate about the site of an outdoor, designated smoking area. Sixty per cent of students responded in favour of a smoking ban on campus as part of a University of Canterbury Students' Association (UCSA) survey this year. However, association president Michael Goldstein said some students would be disappointed because it would make studying on campus an inconvenience.

The American Lung Association analyzed published research, surveys and tobacco industry documents to provide a wide-ranging look at the impact tobacco has in today's college life. The report found fewer college students are smoking than ever before, but the American Lung Association warned that smoking rates were nearly this low in 1989 and then skyrocketed in the following decade to a new peak high of 30.6 percent. Contributing to that unstable smoking trend is the tobacco industry. In 2005, the tobacco industry spent more than $1 million a day sponsoring events and giveaways targeting college students. The report also notes that of 119 schools surveyed in one study, students at 109 schools reported seeing tobacco promotions in an event on campus.
